

Deep thoughts.. Language itself is biased. Remixing cultures creates an endless flow and progressivism gain individualism spreading misaligned dynamics. What we call AI is matching patterns across those data and its statistics outputting meta graph relationships. It appears that every relationships are totally subjectives. So basically some entities enforce a form of archetypal "truth" that dominates what we could see as the collective unconscious. Simulation or not the language models and agents display intelligence just because we think of prompts and interpret the answers. Safe AI is in personas and twin archetypes. A chatbot giving a wrong answers would force one to look for an other source. But how to put in perspective this was wrong at first place? We just say the tech is bad but it's long time Turing complete just cycling over limited knowledge and perspectives. Dystopian futures or endless cosmopolitans drama are wildest futuristic themes.
